A SELECTIVE GUIDE TO LAS VEGAS

VITAL STATISTICS

Las Vegas - F.A.A. Symbol LAS - also known as LV is the largest city in Nevada. Its metropolitan area, which includes the cities of North Las Vegas, Boulder City and Henderson, has a population of over 400,000 people.

It is one of the fastest growing cities in the world. In 1950 Las Vegas numbered less than 25,000 residents.

Las Vegas is not only the "live entertainment capitol in the world", but because of its climate and facilities, it is in great demand for conventions, some of which have attracted close to 50,000 people at one time.

WEATHER

The climate is a semi-arid desert with hot summers and mild winters. In October the weather is usually delightful. The daytime temperatures range between 80 and 90 degrees and at night between 55 and 65 degrees with very low humidity, making outdoor sports and traveling very comfortable.

WEARING APPAREL

Las Vegas is very casual. Comfortable clothes are worn both in the daytime and at night. Jackets are at times requested in some of the more deluxe restaurants. Ties are very rarely worn even at meetings, restaurants or shows.

The ladies also dress casually, though frequently evening affairs are attended in long gowns or dressy pantsuits.

SPECIAL NOTICE TO TRAVELERS

A. LIGHT PLANE PILOTS:

The Southwest offers relaxing and fascinating flying, a combination of desert and mountain flying, with usual visibility of 50 to 75 miles in October and smooth air, especially at 9,000 to 12,000 feet. These are also recommended altitudes if flying IFR even in VFR weather. Frequently the radar may not pick you up below that because of the mountain ranges.

Problems do exist and it is better to prevent them than fight them. It is very easy to get lost in mountain ranges and deserted valleys as they frequently blend, becoming confusing to the unfamiliar flyer.
